

ABSTRACT

Methods for administering polypeptides, including antibodies, capable of binding to OX-2/CD200 and/or an OX-2/CD200 receptor are disclosed. These polypeptides are useful in treating disease states characterized by upregulated levels of OX-2/CD200, including cancer and CLL.